"Chalchitlicue", Mixed media on wood panel, 24x24" (Chawl-choot-lee-kway) Aztec water goddess whose name means "She of the Jade Skirt." Some legends say she was married to Tlaloc, the rain god. The Pyramid of the Moon at Teotihuacan was built for her, the Pyramid of the Sun for him. Her statue, found under the pyramid in 2008, is now in the Museum of Anthropology. She is often associated with water serpents, making her the perfect choice to paint in 2013, Year of the Female Water Snake.

"HER NAME IS JYOTI" huipil homage for the young woman raped on the bus in Delhi. Her father, the hero of this tragedy, has spoken up, has spoken her name publicly, so that she is not forgotten, and so as not to allow this tradition of secrecy and shame to continue. This was an incredibly brave thing to do in India. Small blue patch beneath the veil is embroidered with "Imagine a World Without Violence", the fabric I purchased in Delhi in 2010, the embroidery was done in Nepal. Here's to lifting the veil.
